Dr. Chris Zullig, a professor at the School of Medicine at the University of Connecticut, says that the only way to beat Lyme disease is with a strong immune system. That's why prevention is the best approach to avoid the illness in the first place, Zullig says. Zullig recommends using products that have insect repellent. They are becoming popular because they are effective against ticks as well as mosquitoes, which are also vectors for Lyme disease, and a number of other infectious diseases. Some of the available products include: PermaNet, made by Ultra. It's a ready-to-use spray-on solution that kills both ticks and mosquitoes. The bug repellent has a concentration of 4 percent. Ultra recommends the spray should be sprayed on clothes as well as on pets and people. In addition, the product also has a pleasant aroma that is not overpowering. Lemon oil is a well-known insect repellent, and its effectiveness has been proved over and over again. It's one of the few oils that has shown effectiveness in the laboratory. Insect Repellent Body Spray, is a combination product that contains citronella essential oil and camphor essential oil, the two most common insect repellents. Citronella essential oil has a concentration of 15.8 percent and camphor essential oil has a concentration of 20 percent. Although it's difficult to prove whether citronella or camphor is more effective, citronella has been proven to be more effective than camphor at repulsing mosquitoes. It has also been proven to be more effective than DEET (N 82157476af
